

Please do not preempt the current Indiana Telephone Privacy Law. I think that setting a minimum national standard for telemarketing and privacy is a good thing, but to do so by lowering existing standards in Indiana isn't the way to do it.

I don't like being hassled by telemarketers, and when Indiana made the initiative to pass it's own telemarketing privacy law, I enthusiastically placed my name on the state's "no-call" list. As a result, the number of telemarketing calls I receive has dwindled from 10 - 15 per week down to almost zero.
